COTTOLENE IS MADE TO EAT

Made from clarified oil, expressed from Cotton Seed—as pure and golden as the southern Sunshine which produces it.

For convenience in handling, there is added to this oil enough beef suet to make it a semi-solid.

The combination of these two pure natural products makes Cottolene, a shortening and cooking fat, with which in healthfulness, cleanliness, flavor and economy, nothing in the world can compare.

IMITATIONS are MADE TO SELL

To sell on the merits of the genuine. To sell by substitution; or by deception. To sell to the injury of the genuine, to the dissatisfaction of the consumer, to the detriment of the dealer, to the loss of all concerned—except the scheming counterfeiter himself.

If you wish the best food and the best health, you should insist that your cooking be done with genuine Cottolene. Refuse all counterfeits.

SCATTERED ROSES.

A little maiden strayed one day
Where roses bloomed along the hedges,
Where'd among grass sparkled the way,
And ferns peeped out from mossy sedges.

She heaped her little wooden cart
With the bright blooms to overflowing,
Then turned to go, her little heart
Unconscious where her feet were going.

A hillside lay along before,
With every step the child ascended,
She spilled her roses more and more
Till all were gone, and day was ended.

And when the maiden came not back
Came anxious loved ones out to find her
And traced her by the rosy track
Of all the flowers she left behind her.

Our little maiden grows in grace,
Her path along life's line was leading.
Her still ascending feet we trace
By flowers she droppeth still unheeding.

THE ASSASSIN.

Polydore Chapoteau, grocer, had retired from business. He had taken a house in the country, where he raised chickens and lived happily. He was considered among the fortunate few who realized their dreams here below.

Chapoteau was a good fellow and was fond of entertaining his neighbors. Champignol was his best friend. They had played some famous games of billiards together and had become intimate, though not without a little rivalry in caroms. Champignol lived at the other end of the village, and every Thursday he came to take pot luck with Chapoteau.

Well, one Thursday when the melons were ripe Champignol arrived, as usual.

"Mme Chapoteau and the servant have gone to the city and will not return till the last train. We are alone and must prepare our feast ourselves."

Champignol put on the servant's apron, Chapoteau his wife's apron, and while one prepared the vegetables the other one roasted the meat.

It was a fine feast. A melon just ripe, cultivated by Chapoteau with paternal tenderness, appeared at dessert. Champignol adored melons. He left only the rind and the seeds.

"I have eaten too much," he said after the coffee.

He became melancholy. Chapoteau got up, and without saying a word opened a drawer where his pharmacy was arranged, and taking one of the vials poured from it into Champignol's mouth a teaspoonful of medicine.

"You do not find me unprepared," he said. "Do you not feel better?"

Champignol rubbed his hand over his stomach and nodded affirmatively. Suddenly his chin dropped, and he appeared to be asleep.

"Refreshing sleep!" murmured Chapoteau, happy at the effect of his drug, and while waiting for Champignol to awaken he commenced to wash the dishes.

Half an hour later he returned to the room on his tiptoes. Champignol had not awakened.

"I will look after my chickens," said Chapoteau to himself.

Half an hour passed thus. Champignol still slept on.

"He is taking a long nap," thought Chapoteau. "I will arrange the lettuce."

That occupied a full hour. Now Champignol would surely be awake. But Champignol still slept.

"Ah, the idea!" growled Chapoteau, and he commenced to slap his friend on the back gently at first, then harder and finally with his fists. Champignol did not move.

Then a cold shiver ran over Chapoteau. Had an accident happened to him? Could he have burst a blood vessel? Melons are traitorous.

He opened Champignol's hands and slapped them, opened his mouth and breathed into it. Finally, not knowing what to do, he began to tickle him under his arms and laughed loudly to excite him. In truth, poor Chapoteau had no desire at all to laugh.

Champignol remained as lifeless as a work of art.

"Perhaps it would be better to leave him alone. He will awaken himself."

Chapoteau walked about his garden, a prey to a vague agitation. Suddenly the idea came into his mind that his friend was playing him a trick.

He knelt before him.

"Now, Champignol, no more foolishness. You have deceived me long enough."

Champignol did not move.

"Champignol, dear old Champignol, my dear Champignol, Gnognol, my little Pignol!"

Chapoteau employed all the tones of tenderness, surprise and terror. "Little Pignol" was said in a broken way, with a trembling voice. A stone would have been touched, but Champignol remained insensible.

"Ah, that's it, is it?" said Chapoteau, and becoming fierce he gave his sleeping friend a blow in the face.

"There! Now we shall see."

Champignol oscillated, swayed and fell forward with his head upon the table.

"Ah! You want to frighten me! That won't do! There and there!" He was becoming exasperated. The honest and gentle Chapoteau had been transformed into an inquisitor.

Suddenly his arm fell. If this should be real! If it were not a joke of Champignol's!

He seized his hat and rushed out like the wind. Where should he go? For the doctor, of course! Why had he not thought of it at once? He was only a few steps from the doctor's house when a terrible thought stopped him short.

He had given laudanum to Champignol, to be sure, but he thought he had given him only a fair dose. Perhaps he had made a mistake. Perhaps he had poisoned Champignol. They would have an autopsy of the body. They would discover the poison. He would be arrested, judged, condemned and dragged to the scaffold!

To the scaffold!

These words clashed together in his head. He felt as if a mill wheel were revolving in his brain. He retraced his steps. Perhaps—who knows?—Champignol may have awakened at last!

Vain hope! Champignol had turned green. His hands were as cold as marble. His heart had ceased beating.

Their little pleasuring was turning into a tragedy. Chapoteau buried his head in his hands, sad, distracted, seeing nothing but that inert mass, those rigid members and closed eyes, and through the doors he seemed to hear the noise of the courtroom.

He was alone, without witnesses. No one could prove his innocence. Everything was against him. It would be impossible also to prove an alibi. People had seen Champignol come in, and it was known that he came every Thursday. They had seen him also walking in his garden. Chapoteau believed himself lost. Only one resource was left him. He took Champignol in his arms, lifted him from his chair, and pulling him by his shoulders, his head and his legs dragged him to the end of the garden. It was growing dark. Suddenly a board fell near to Chapoteau. He started, cried out, ready to struggle, thinking the officers had come to arrest him. The silhouette of a cat, prowling on the wall in the clear twilight, eased his mind a little.

Near the hedge there was a large round hole. Chapoteau rolled the body of his friend into it. His feet projected beyond, so he covered them with straw.

"Adieu, Champignol," he sobbed. There at least his victim was in a secure place. They would not discover him there very soon. Chapoteau would have time to escape.

He reached the fields, walking straight ahead, without plans. He had only one thought—to get away, to go to the end of the world, but his feet refused to carry him. Every few minutes he was obliged to sit down by the roadside. He had knotted a handkerchief about his head, so as not to be recognized. Already he was devising the ruses of the criminal.

Three hours had sufficed to lose his assured position, to make an assassin of him, to lower him to the ranks of the greatest rascals. What did his conscience matter to him? He would not be the less culpable in the eyes of the world, and his crime would appear all the more horrible because his victim had been his best friend. And yet he had been an honest man during 55 years. He had practiced all the virtues. He had dreamed of dying in his bed. Poor Chapoteau! Most unfortunate Mme. Chapoteau!

He saw himself on the bench of the accused. The judge was talking to him. They had spread out before him the victim's clothes, and in the darkness the crowd howled, stamped and threatened to kill him.

Then a great fear spurred him on, and he began again to walk. Sometimes he stopped, believing he could hear some one running after him. The trees took on strange forms in the darkness. The wind whispered, "Poisoner!" He stopped for a long time on the bank of a pond trying to persuade himself to jump in.

A noise of footsteps caused him to look up suddenly. Two policemen were coming toward him. In the dusk they seemed enormous, like the pillars of the guillotine.

"It is all over," moaned poor Chapoteau, "they have followed me. They will arrest me."

He hid himself behind a hedge. The policemen passed on.

Chapoteau wandered for an hour or two. He could no longer see nor hear. His head swayed on his shoulders, as an empty gourd sways in the wind.

"By this time," he thought, "I should be in my bed at home."

And distracted by his fears he stumbled against a wall. There were houses in front of him, black as his crime, as his thoughts, as his remorse. However, a light gleamed beneath a door. Tired out, his strength and energy exhausted, he knocked. He heard voices inside. Finally they opened the door.

Chapoteau gave a loud cry.

"Champignol!"

It was Champignol in person. He had awakened in the hole and was still laughing at the joke.

Champignol a joker indeed! Chapoteau thought himself dreaming.

Then he had not given a fatal dose of laudanum—though a little too much, it is true.

He had not killed Champignol. He had not committed a crime! He would not die on the scaffold! He touched Champignol with the tips of his fingers, as one touches a delicate piece of game, fearing that this shape was only Champignol's shadow.

In reality, Chapoteau never forgave Champignol for the fright which he gave him that day.—Translated From the French For Romance.

Anointed Stones.

The custom of anointing stones with oil (see Genesis xxviii, 18, 19), and leaving them as memorial pillars or objects of worship was one that was very common among the ancients. The stones first worshiped were probably of meteoric origin, which, having been seen to fall from heaven, were easily associated with some deity. In Roman mythology Abadires was the name given to a stone which was worshiped because it was the general belief that it had once been swallowed by Saturn.

The "standing images" referred to as being prohibited in Leviticus (xxvi, 7) are thought to have been these same "anointed stones." In the light which modern investigation has thrown upon the curious customs of the early east, the act of Jacob which is recorded at the first Scriptural reference mentioned in this "note" is of special interest as showing the mood of his mind and heart after a night's entertainment of such a gracious and blessed vision. To this day the "anointed stones" of the orient are called Baetylia, which Bochart suggests may be derived from Bethel, where Jacob first anointed a pillar as a sacred memorial.—St. Louis Republic.

MR. WILSON TALKS.

MY Name is Wilson, I do an insurance business on LaSalle street, in Chicago, Ill., and I live in Evanston, Ill. Evanston is what was originally a scattering population on a pretty point on Lake Michigan, esteemed years ago far from the city of Chicago, but now one of the varied towns which may go within it by vote of the population.

I am married and have a wife and one child. That child is a boy (I suppose I should feel the same solicitude if it was a girl), and I have a father's natural fancies as to what must be the best thing to give that child the right kind of intelligence, and so direct his course that he may succeed in life. I have studied a great deal upon the subject. My own experience would not be of great value, because I have succeeded only to the limit of the average man and am barely established, still, I own the house and lot upon which I live, and am feeling perfectly safe in meeting the exigencies of the year. I want the boy to take a broader view than I did, to be a bigger man in the world. I have studied how to teach him to do that, and he has done pretty well, as far as the preliminaries go. Now, I have thought over what I should say to him and have sometimes been puzzled. I could not very well tell him what to do. I wanted to tell him what I needed but what I did not learn myself when I was of his age, and what my father did not know how to tell me, or else was not thoughtful enough to do so. I wanted to tell him how to follow the example of those who have succeeded at the present time and under the circumstances which ordinarily affect a young man struggling in this Republic established on this comparatively new world to-day. I wanted to tell him just what he had better do to get along well, and to point out to him what had been done by the people who were successful at the present time.

Of course, the record of the people of any time past would not be of so much value, because circumstances must necessarily have been different when they were alive. I feel confident, though, that if I could learn, some way and somehow, what the people who are so successful to-day have done and how they did it, I could give to my boy such advice as would make his own life at least as far removed from failure as justified by the natural ability he may possess.

I looked around for some authority which I might consult in order to give him the facts most essential with this idea of mine in mind, but I could find none until I discovered that a great publishing firm in Chicago had decided to bring out a book giving the photographs of all the people who are prominent in America to-day. Here was what I wanted. The book, as I have learned, is going to be published in 10 parts, 10 pages to each, with a recent photograph on each page of some active leading American man or woman of to-day, while underneath appears the story of that same person's life—the story telling what that person did, and how the ends attained were eventually accomplished. Here was what I wanted, here was what I needed in various ways; here was what I was certainly seeking in order to obtain the information with which to educate my boy and secure for him that knowledge which will give him a source of thought and make him prominent in the world.

I have the first sheets of this work. It is a graphic story of America's Greatest Men and Women, told in each instance on a single page underneath a photograph of recent date, which conveys to the eye an idea of what that person is. To me the photograph tells even more than the suggestive record beneath, and yet it is odd how in each instance the correct story corresponds with the expression upon the face which is reproduced in the portrait above. I do not know how the series will end. I know very little about this new feature of the newspaper people. I know nothing about the publishers and their expectations, but I do know this, that if the series so begun should be continued to its practical, ordinary good sense end—and I don't care whether that will include 200 or 700 of America's Greatest Men and Women, which is the title of the book—I do know this, that for the ordinary, active and alert business man—I will certainly say far more for the student or the literary man, or the politician or the statesman—for all these I will say it will be simply the most valuable and the most remarkable book produced in modern history. The wonder is that some one has not thought of it before. Yet no one seems to have done so since the days of Plutarch. Plutarch knew something. That shrewd old fellow knew that all who would get out of the drift, all who would accomplish great things, wanted to know every detail of the lives of those who had better luck or more courage or a broader brain than their fellows, but I am no authority on these points. I only know that there is produced a second Plutarch's Lives, that its biographies are shrewd, graphic and curt, and written without bias and without prejudice. I only know that there was a Plutarch—God bless the old fellow—and that there is this modern work.

This is the work I am going to give to my boy. I am going to make him read it thoroughly. The work is announced as consisting of 16 Parts, with 16 pages and 16 photographs in each part, and when bound, the whole series will make a great volume of 256 pages, the like of which has never been equaled. It is the story of the personal character of the men and women who are making the nation's history at this particular time. What a work this is! Do you imagine that I would miss it for my boy, or, incidentally, for myself?

GREGSON, THE INVENTOR.

A REMARKABLE ENGLISHMAN'S WORK IN THIS COUNTRY

Incessant Labor Nearly Cost Him His Life—He Tried America's Greatest Remedy and It Made Him Well—Sleeps Sound for the First Time in Several Years.

"Inventing is my business," said George Gregson.

This remarkable Englishman has been in this country five years. He received the great gold medal from the Paris Academy of Inventors, and it was his work that was selected by the Examiner-in Chief at the World's Fair, as the best representative invention of its class.

Most people think of inventors as men gifted with golden brains that turn out the most marvelous devices without exertion.

As a fact, men of ideas are the hardest workers. They live by the very sweat of their brains; in the eager pursuit of an idea, like many professional and business men, they forget that their minds are not tireless and that to rack their brains all day and far into the night, the nervous system must have an unusually good and abundant nourishment that will build up its myriad delicate parts.

The following letter from Mr Gregson is an example that is better than columns of advice:

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., April 5, 1894.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co.,

Gentlemen:—Having been subject for years to extreme nervousness, with its attendant want of sleep, I was induced, much against my will, to try a bottle of Paine's celery compound simply as an experiment. The improvement that followed was so marked that of my own accord I purchased a second bottle and then a third. By the time I had finished a third bottle I felt like a new man, slept sound at night and awoke in the morning both ready and able to do a day's work. Whenever I now feel in the least indisposed I at once take one or two doses, and that is all I require. In my case Paine's celery compound proved to be all that is said for it. You have my permission to publish this in any way you like.

Very truly yours,
GEORGE GREGSON.

His is the experience of thousands of others.

Paine's celery compound feeds the nerve tissues, banishes lassitude, debility, inability to sleep and prevents nervous prostration.

When an overworked and worried brain worker, no matter whether student, minister, lawyer, or man of business, has sufficiently sinned against the laws of health, he begins to suffer from disturbances of heart and stomach and to have certain signs of nervous exhaustion He works with less ease, sleeps badly. New symptoms come, giddiness, dimness of sight, neuralgia of face or scalp, with entire nights of sleeplessness. Many a man struggles on, ignorant of the terrible demands he is making on an exhausted brain.

Diseases of the nervous system do not come without warning Rheumatism, dyspepsia, and diseases of the heart, liver and kidneys are loud cries for a prompt increase of nourishment for the brain and nerve centers. This feeding with just the food these vital parts crave, is what Paine's celery compound does. It is upon this marvelous power of nourishing all the nervous tissues and purifying the blood that its remarkable cures depend.

Its action is perfectly intelligible to every well educated physician, and that is just why Paine's celery compound is unhesitatingly prescribed by physicians in every city, town or village, without exception, in the United States and Canada.

It supplies rich, new blood, full of brain and nerve food; it feeds worn-out nerve centers and exhausted tissues wherever the freshly enriched blood stream goes. The languor and tired feeling that without exception accompanies thin, lifeless blood, vanishes; the spirits are raised and a new feeling of health and life declares the presence of pure blood and well fed nerves and brain

Dun's Review reports 232 failures for the week against 313 for the corresponding week, last year.

Rev. James W. Putnam, formerly assistant pastor of the Baptist Tabernacle in New York, and now pastor of Trinity Baptist Church, has been indicted for criminal libel, on complaint of Maggie Burke, a young woman whose name he coupled in a discreditable relation with that of Rev. Dr. Potter, pastor of the Tabernacle, with whom he had quarreled.

Postmaster General Bissell is quoted as saying that it is against the policy of the Post Office Department to appoint women to office and that only in very unusual cases will such appointments be made. There are, Mr. Bissell says, some 4,000 women in the department and they do not make satisfactory officials. There are more complaints against them than male postmasters and they are a constant source of trouble and annoyance to the department. On the other hand the post office authorities of Great Britian are of the opinion that women make most acceptable, agreeable and efficient post office officials and give them the preference over men in the smaller offices.

The scheme to "reform" the schools of Jersey City, in the interest of the Republican party, has come to grief. One of the four Republicans appointed to the Board of Education by Mayor Wanser, to do the "reforming," weakened when it came to voting to turn out faithful and efficient principals and teachers, and voted with the three Democratic members of the Board to retain them, thus smashing the Republican slate. The Republican bosses are howling mad, but the best sentiment of the city sustains the member of the Board who puts public duty and the welfare of the schools ahead of party loyalty.

Benjamin Fitzman, a saloon keeper of Passaic, N J., died of pneumonia, Wednesday, and was buried, yesterday. The body had been two days on ice, but when the funeral was in progress some of the friends noticed that it had a lifelike appearance, there being a slight flush on the cheeks. Rev. Father Kviatkowski, the officiating priest, was so impressed by the appearance of the body that he hesitated to perform the service. After the body had been buried in the Catholic cemetery at Lodi, and while the funeral party was returning to Passaic, the priest was appealed to by friends of the dead man to have tests made to determine whether life was really extinct. The body was disinterred and a physician who was called experimented with the body for an hour, but could produce no sign of life, which was not at all strange, for if pneumonia hadn't knocked all the life out of the man, two days in the undertakers' ice box would surely have finished him.

NEW SYSTEM OF SWITCHING.

Introduced in the Erie's Jersey City Yard by Superintendent Maguire.

From the Port Jervis Union.

Supt. J. W. Maguire, of the Eastern Division of the Erie, has inaugurated a new system of drilling or switching cars at the freight yard on the meadows near Jersey City, which is a saving of seventy-five per cent. of time in performing the work, and lessens the liability of personal injury to the switchmen. It also decreases to a very large extent the damage to rolling stock, and obviates a very important matter in the despatching of trains through the yard; the long and annoying delays to the trains and engines arriving at the terminal.

By the old system when a train arrived, a switch engine would couple on either the head or rear of the train and pull and jerk in both directions until it had the train drilled out for the numerous docks, floats and sidings consuming from two to three hours, in the meantime pulling out or breaking drawheads or couplings. With the new system the switch engine is equipped with a pole, one end stationary on the front end of the engine and manipulated by levers in the hands of the switchman, who is seated in a convenient position on the engine. When a train arrives in the yard this engine is run on a track alongside the cars to be drilled, the coupling pins pulled and the cars given a start sufficient to run them in the side track designated for each class of freight or dock. In this manner a train of fifty cars can be sorted in about twenty minutes instead of two or three hours as above.

New Postoffice Names.

Postmaster General Bissell has issued an order providing that hereafter only short names or names of one word only shall be accepted as names for newly established postoffices. Exceptions may be made by the department when the name is historical or has become local by long usage. Satisfactory reasons must be presented to the department for changes of postoffice names. The postmaster general says that this rule will remove a source of annoyance to the department and of injury to the postal service.—Washington Star.

The Scotch Are Shocked.

The modest Glasgow people have received another awful shock, says a correspondent. A venerable citizen just returned from Paris was horrified to find in the shop windows of the Scottish city a cycling dress for women similar to that which he found fast Frenchwomen wearing. In a local newspaper he exhorts the women of Scotland to beware of these devilish accouterments, which he declares were designed by satan to lower the moral tone of women

Warped by the Heat.

The sun got in its work, this morning, on the exposed rails of the electric road on North street, and its heat expanded them so that the spaces left between the rails, which are sufficient to give room for expansion under ordinary conditions, did not at all suffice, and a great kink appeared in the track in front of McMonagle & Rogers'.

The Great Good Given by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Silver Springs, N. Y.

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:

"Gentlemen—I really cannot say half I want to about what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for me; that is, I cannot tell the story strong enough. I was for years troubled with my heart and paralysis of the stomach. My many friends were quite anxious about me. I have been taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and

This medicine has proved its merit and has done me a wonderful amount of good. I asked my family physician whether I had better take Hood's Sarsaparilla or not, and he told me perhaps I had better finish the bottle I had on hand, but I had three bottles, then, and the results have been really wonderful. I think Hood's [illegible] Depot, Dies Before Her Husband Reaches Her—Two Street Sprinklers—Goshen Ball Players Defeated at Montgomery—Other Notes.

From our regular correspondent.

—The lady who was stricken with apoplexy in the Erie depot, yesterday afternoon, was identified, during the afternoon, as Mrs. Edwin Duryea, of Craigville. She had come to this village with her husband, yesterday morning, to have some dentist work done, and having to wait some time, her husband drove home alone, the arrangement being that she was to return on Erie train 6, and while waiting in the depot for this train she lost consciousness. When the train on the Newburgh branch which connects with No. 6 reached Craigville and Mrs. Duryea was not on board, Mr. Duryea drove to this village for his wife, only to find her dead. The shock was a terrible one to the bereaved husband. The body was taken to Craigville, last evening, by Undertaker Van Vliet and the funeral will be held from her late residence, Monday afternoon, at 2 o'clock. Mrs. Duryea was in her fifty-second year.

—The dust in the streets is well laid by the application of water from two street sprinklers, which are kept going all the time. This is a boon to every merchant and housekeeper. Warwick finds fault over the cost of one sprinkler, but Goshen is glad to provide the cost of two.

—The Goshen Ball Club went to Montgomery, yesterday, and were defeated by the Montgomery club by a score of 12 to 3. What the Goshen club needs is good hard practice before playing again.

of women will be reconciled to a more humble lot in life, when they learn that it is contrary to etiquette for the Queen of England and her family to enter a shop, but that they must have all goods sent to them for inspection. No doubt there are some pleasant things about being Queen of England. She has a nice comfortable home, her children are well provided for and she has a good income, but what comfort would there be in having a good income if we could not go shopping with part of it? A bargain must be an unknown delight to her, for, of course, only the most expensive articles are considered fit for the use of a queen. Poor thing, she can never know the satisfaction of buying a nineteen cent book at Macy's, nor of opening the express packages when they come home, and, after all, it is the simple joys that make up a large share of one's earthly happiness. A RETIRED BUSINESS WOMAN.

A Page From Her History.

The important experiences of others are interesting. The following is no exception: "I had been troubled with heart disease 25 years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously I was in business, but obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen and I was indeed in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and said that his sister who had been afflicted with heart disease had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could feel a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles something I had not done for months and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost putrified. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down, and I was so much better that I did my own work. On my recommendation six others are taking this valuable remedy."—Mrs. Morgan, 501 W. [illegible] st. Chicago, Ill.

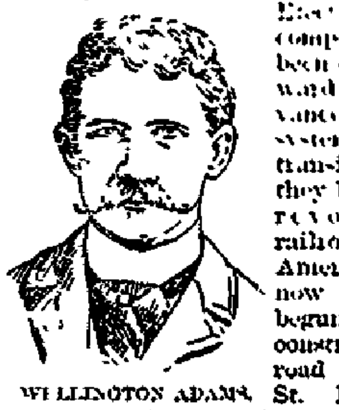
TO RUN 100 MILES AN HOUR

The Dream of Electrician Wellington Adams May Be Realized.



WELLINGTON ADAMS.

For several years the efforts of the officers of the Chicago and St Louis Electric Railway company have been directed toward the advancement of a system of rapid transit which they believe will revolutionize railroading in America, and now work has begun, and the construction of a road connecting St. Louis and Chicago will probably be pushed to completion. Under its charter the company is empowered to construct a practically straight line between those points.

The road will be double track, standard gauge, with 72 pound rails laid upon hard wood ties, with rock ballasted foundation All bridges will be of standard steam railroad construction. There will be no railroad or country road crossings at grade. The line will pass over all railroads, and the country roads will be thrown over the tracks by means of bridges. The road will be operated from four electric power stations, each located at the mouth of a coal mine owned by the company and situated along the line. Fifty sections of five miles each will constitute the electrical divisions of the road. Behind each section having a car upon it there will be a dead section, on which it will be impossible for any car to run so long as a train is upon the preceding section, rendering it impossible for two trains to be upon one section at the same time, thus making a most complete and perfect block system.

It is the intention to run passenger, express and mail trains at the rate of 100 miles an hour, these cars making no stops between the two cities and making the entire distance in three hours, whereas it now takes all day to accomplish the journey. The motor passenger cars will be constructed of steel and will be long and low, the top of the car being but nine feet from the rails, and the front will be semiwedge shape to lessen atmospheric resistance. The rails will be fitted with mitered joints, doing away with the shock and click that prevail in the present methods.

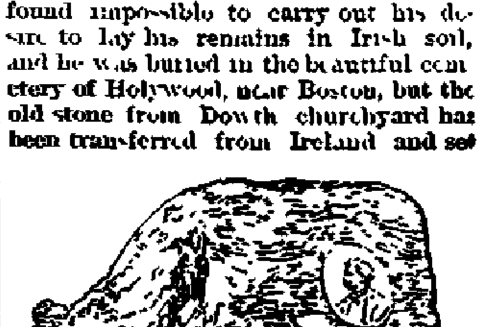
The originator and general manager of the scheme, Dr. Wellington Adams, is a Chicago electrician well known throughout the west to financiers and railroad men and the prospects are that we shall soon witness a great advancement in railroad travel.

JOHN BOYLE O'REILLY'S GRAVE

A Huge Bowlder With a Bronze Medallion of the Poet Marks the Spot.

When a boy in his native town of Dowth, Ireland, John Boyle O'Reilly the poet, carved his name on one of the stones in the wall of the ancient church at that place, and it was his wish that when life's journey had ended he might sleep in the old burying ground which surrounds it, with the stone he himself had carved to mark his last resting place. Later, when he visited the grave of General Sheridan at Arlington cemetery, Virginia, he was much impressed with the beauty of the surroundings and especially with the striking memorial above the grave of the great soldier—a bronze medallion of the general set in a huge bowlder—and he was moved to remark, "It is worth while being dead to rest beneath a memorial like this."

When the poet editor died, it was found impossible to carry out his desire to lay his remains in Irish soil, and he was buried in the beautiful cemetery of Holywood, near Boston, but the old stone from Dowth churchyard has been transferred from Ireland and set into the massive rock which fitly marks his grave, and a bronze medallion of the poet has been sunk into the face of the monument directly over the spot where his body reposes.



BOWLDER OVER THE GRAVE OF JOHN BOYLE O'REILLY.

The medallion of O'Reilly is beautifully executed in relief and is the work of Sculptor John Donoghue It is a work of art, and Mrs O'Reilly and the friends of the poet regard it as an absolutely faithful likeness. The placing of the stone from Dowth in the bowlder fulfills as nearly as possible O Reilly's wish It is a block of yellow sandstone 16 inches long, 1 high and 7 deep The letters "J. B. O'R." are plainly discernible and are quite regular in outline, but time and exposure have nearly obliterated the date of "60."

The immense rock above the grave is a part of the ledge underlying the burial plot, is pentagonal in shape, 12 feet in height and weighs in the neighborhood of 75 tons. Around its base are planted 100 ivies from Dowth castle and two others from the grave of Martha Washington. The scenery around the grave is wooded and rural and it is considered the handsomest spot in [illegible].

"ADAMANT" WALL PLASTER!

The New, Cheap Substitute for Common Plaster.

It is very hard and very adhesive; it does away with the warping and shrinkage of doors and casings, and the building is not saturated with water, as is necessarily must be when common plaster is used; it costs originally but little more than lime plaster, and in the end its superior qualities make it immeasurably cheaper; it saves waiting several weeks or months for the buildings to dry out; it does not crack or fall off, even in the case of leakage; it is applied easily by any good plasterer; it is the only material with which repairing can be done neatly and "to stay."

DIED TOGETHER.

A Recent Ceremony Recalls a Dramatic Incident of the Franco-German War.

A ceremony has just taken place at Sainte Genevieve des Bois, in the Seine-et-Oise, which recalls a painfully dramatic incident in the Franco-German war. The conscripts of the department assembled to place wreaths on the graves of Andre Delorme, a young French soldier, and his sweetheart, Jeanne Bernier. Delorme, who was only 19 years of age, had been wounded in the war at Choisy-le-Roy, so that, having been invalided, he returned to his native place. The Germans were then occupying Sainte Genevieve

The first place he went to, so the French account runs, was the home of his sweetheart. On approaching it he was surprised to hear her screaming The door was shut, so that he burst open a window and thus got into the house, when he found the girl struggling with a drunken German officer. Mad with rage, the young Frenchman shot the German, and for this he was seized and summarily shot, without even a court martial trial.

Half a dozen German soldiers placed him against a wall and pointed their rifles at him At that moment the young girl rushed forward toward her sweetheart, and the two lovers were shot dead together Their tomb bears the inscriptions "Andre Delorme, died for his country 1870 Jeanne Dernier, killed by the enemy, 1870."—Paris Herald.

Getting Ready For the Wedding.

The arrangements already commenced indicate that the wedding of the czarowitz and Princess Alix of Hesse will be the most gorgeous ceremony of the kind witnessed in Europe for many years. Every reigning family will be represented, and all the Asiatic potentates owning to the czar's sovereignty will send delegations and special missions to St. Petersburg with costly gifts. The shopkeepers at the Russian capital and Moscow expect the most brilliant and profitable season of this generation, and the owners of villa property in the neighborhood of Peterhof, the czar's Baltic palace, are so confident that the boom will effect them that they have already trebled their rents. Queen Victoria, according to current report, has responded nobly to the family call by promising $50,000 toward the bride's dowry.—Moscow Letter for Infants and Children.

CASTORIA

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher is on every wrapper.

SOME STRAY THOUGHTLETS

SEVERAL TOPICS DISCUSSED FROM A WOMAN'S POINT OF VIEW.

[illegible]

A long time ago, some one asked, "Why do summer roses fade?" I never heard any answer had been given. Probably these particular people, who could have given a learned reply, were incapable of "dropping into poetry" and so have left us still in the dark, not wishing to be outdone in the matter of rhyme. However, the one who wanted information, went on in argumentative vein, accounting for the fading in a not very satisfactory, lugubrious way. To me it seems much more pertinent to ask why roses all come at one time? If we could ask either of these questions with a hope of having the habits of this flower [illegible] I don't think we would mind the fading so much.

[illegible] for roses to bloom. If he was sentenced on the first of June, not a rose would he see, for unless he was a very bad tramp indeed, no flowers would be brought him in jail. Authorities who sentence these children of nature should inquire into their tastes and see that they are not cutting them off from all they may have looked forward to for a whole year.

I saw in a paper recently that a man digging for a sewer was accidentally struck on the head by a companion's shovel and rendered unconscious, in which state he remained [illegible]

[illegible] flowery the fast half. Then some one thought shady was more descriptive. I don't like shady; it is too often applied to things which are not cheerful. The shady side of the street may have a comfortable sound, but the shady side of life may mean anything dreadful. To a friend of mine, just now, it means water bugs. She says water bugs are curious things, they are so agile and persistent; to get once in a house is to "have and to hold from that time forth till death us do part." Divorce in their case don't last.

I pity my friend. [illegible] spiders and rats.

I think, sometimes, people don't mind so much the particular nuisance they are used to. My friend said she did mind water bugs, but she owned they had some things in their favor—that is comparatively, they [illegible] die pleasantly. She didn't [illegible] know their mental condition [illegible], but said they are not disagreeable to one who puts them to death in the good old-fashioned way, by smashing. They seem under such circumstances (usually a shoe) to evaporate. There is no debris as in the case of a spider or [illegible]

[illegible] that the worst of it [illegible] only [illegible] housekeepers have [illegible]. I did not tell her that [illegible] time had held that opinion, [illegible] one superior woman had [illegible] one or two once, but [illegible] "got rid of them." She was [illegible] couldn't be superior and [illegible] did like doing other [illegible] pursuing water bugs, [illegible] their death might be [illegible] plaintively. "Think of [illegible] some creatures and [illegible] for months, when, behold, one appears in the bath tub, another darts out from under a paper in a drawer, and there is still another on your dish towel." She sighed as she declared life was not worth living if any part of it had to be spent in an effort to solve the water bug problem.

THE GHOST OF THE NOTCH.

The Mystery of a Haunted House Explained—A Trick Which Frightened Many People.

For some time past the house of [illegible] justice.

Several people declared that they had seen the blue-eyed stranger sitting in a rocking chair and that he vanished as they approached. Many saw the chair seized with sudden fits of rocking when no one was near it, and strange noises, as of heavy weights falling, were often heard in different parts of the house, particularly in the loft. The noises occurred in the day time as well as at night.

The Walton Reporter says that Newton Houck was thoroughly alarmed and wanted to quit the place at once; not so, however, his [illegible] magic. All around the house, next to posts and in concealed places were found fine black strings leading to the attic, to which were suspended heavy weights which, when pulled, were so arranged that the weights would drop to the floor. The chair which had rocked so mysteriously was found to be managed in the same way.

The young man in the chair, of course, was an optical illusion, and the blood spots on the floor would probably not prove such under a chemist's analysis.

An explanation was called for, but [illegible]

The Columbia Base Ball Club had a walk over in yesterday's battle with the V. A. C.'s, winning the game by a score of 10 to 0. The cause of the defeat was the inability of the V. A. C.'s to hit the pretzel curves of Howe. The field playing was even up, both sides making an equal number of errors.

The following is the summary:

He spoke to his friends along the line of the road, asking them to be on the lookout for such a dog as he wanted. His friends are at every station, and the result was that every railroad man along the line came to know that conductor —— wanted a dog. The fun makers along the line, and there are scores of them, concluded to have a joke on their dog seeking companion, and this was the result:
